TOSCANINI, ARTURO; Italian Conductor born March 25, 1867, Parma; son of Claudio and Paola Toscanini; studied at the Conservatory of Parma; awarded diploma in 'cello-playing in 1885, also cum laude honors in pianoforte and composition; married Carla De Martini; four children (one deceased). Began career in 1886, as 'cellist for the opera season in Rio de Janeiro, having previously demonstrated his abilities in Italian orchestras; made his first appearance as conductor in Rio, June 25th, following an unsuccessful appearance by Miguez, Brazilian conductor, and the hissing from the podium of the Italian conductors

Superti and Venturi; performed 18 operas thereafter during that season, all without the use of a score. First premier was that of Catalani's "Edmea" in Turin; second of Leoncavallo's "I Pagliacci" in Milan, 1892; conducted premiere of Puccini's "La Bohème" in Turin, 1896, and in 1898 established himself also as a symphonic conductor at the International Fair of Turin, where he supervised and directed 43 concerts; in the same year he became associated with La Scala of Milan; came to New York to conduct at the Metropolitan Opera, 1908-15; also conducted two symphonic performances in this period (1913). In 1915, after a debate on artistic policy, left the Metropolitan to return to Italy; Musical Director of La Scala, 1921-29. Guest Conductor, New York Philharmonic Orchestra, 1926-27; Permanent Conductor, 1928-36. Returned to America to conduct newly-formed NBC Symphony of the National Broadcasting Co., 1937—. An opponent of Fascism in Italy since 1922; for refusal to conduct the "Royal March" and the party anthem "Giovinezza," he was beaten in Bologna by a Fascist mob, 1930; was also twice virtually prisoner of Fascist Government, which deprived him of his passport. First and only foreign conductor invited to perform, 1930-31, in the Wagner Theatre in Bayreuth; refused to conduct Bayreuth Festivals in Germany, 1933, because of his opposition to the political doctrines then in effect; refused to lead Salzburg Festival for same reason, 1937. Most notable of his recent premieres was the Shostakovich "Seventh Symphony," with NBC Symphony in N. Y., July 19, 1942. Has recorded for RCA Victor with the British Broadcasting Symphony, The NBC Symphony and the Philharmonic Symphony of New York, also La Scala Orchestra in 1921.
